EN, ân, prep. (N. B. This preposition is never used with the article plural les, nor even with the masculine sing. le, unless the next substantive begins with a vowel and is followed by a regimen: with the feminine la, its use is confined to few phrases) in. Être en Angleterre, to be in England. EN, in. N. B. Marks a vague and indeterminate sense. Il est en province, he is in the country. Dans marks a precise and determinate sense. Je l'ai mise dans une bonne pension, I put her in a reputable boarding-school. EN haut, above, up stairs. En bas, below, down. En avant, forward. En arrière, backward, behind. En dedans, within. En dehors, without. En moi, in my power. EN, to. Aller en France, to go to France. EN, at, in. En tout temps, at all times. En trois jours, in three days. EN, in, at. Être en bonne santé, to be in good health. Un enfant en nourrice, a child at nurse. Être en prières, to be at prayers. EN, like. Vivre en roi, to live like a king. EN, out of, through. En dépit de lui, in spite of him. EN, to, into. Courir de rue en rue, to run from street to street. De plus en plus, more and more. Avoir confiance en quelqu'un, to trust in one. EN, by, to. En vertu d'un pouvoir, by virtue of a power. EN, for. Armer en course, to arm for a cruise. EN, according to. En conscience, in conscience. Parler en tremblant, to speak trembling. En passant, by the way.

EN TANT QUE, conj. as, considered as; as far as, as much as.

EN, pron. of him, of her, of it, of them; for him, for her, for it, for them; with him, with her, with it, with them; about him, about her, about it, about them; thence, from thence; some, any. EN (is sometimes redundant). Il en est des femmes comme des enfants, it is with women as with children. En vouloir à quelqu'un, to have a grudge against one. Allons-nous-en, let us go. Comment vous en va? how is it with you? how goes it? C'en est fait, it is over. Il en tient, he is caught. Il en a dans l'aile, he is enrapt with your beauty. J'en suis logé là, that is my temper or such is my case. J'en suis de même, it is so with me.

[En. The pronoun en presents a peculiar difficulty to the English, and consequently requires some elucidation. Its primitive use seems to have originated in the ambiguous character of the French possessive pronoun son, sa, ses, and its principal difficulty consists in distinguishing the occasions on which it is to be employed in preference to the pronoun which it seems in some measure to have superseded. En is applied to things; son, sa, ses, leur, etc., to persons. In speaking of persons, son, sa, ses may be used throughout; in speaking of things, son, sa, ses may be used in the first clause, but en is necessary in the second. Cet ouvrage a son mérite, chacun en apprécie la valeur; ces ouvrages ont leur mérite, chacun en apprécie la valeur. L'auteur est connu, et on estime son caractère; les auteurs sont connus, et on estime leur caractère. In other words, speaking of things, the noun modified by son, sa, ses, leur, must refer to the subject of the proposition. Hence we say: chaque travail a sa fatigue; fatigue refers to travail which is the subject of the proposition. Le soin qu'on apporte au travail empêche de sentir sa fatigue, would be improper, fatigue refers not to soin, subject of the proposition, but to travail. We must therefore say: empêche d'en sentir la fatigue. Le temps fuit, la perte en est irréparable, not sa perte, for perte is no part of the first proposition. Cette rivière est belle, le lit en est profond, and not son lit, for the reason above mentioned. Many writers, however, violate the rule when by so doing they can give greater force and precision to their language. La patience est amère, mais son fruit est doux. Si les grands ont le poli du marbre, ils ont aussi sa dureté. Nay the possessive pron. son, sa, ses, is sometimes preferable to en, even in a case of perspicuity: ceux qui ont cru anéantir le christianisme en allumant des bûchers, ont méconnu son esprit; here the rule is set at nought, but the sense is evident at once; son refers to christianisme. Combien ceux qui ont cru anéantir le christianisme, en allumant des bûchers, en ont méconnu l'esprit, here the rule is observed, but there we are, grammatically speaking, at a loss to know whether the author means the spirit of faggots, or the spirit of christianity. The rule must nevertheless be observed.]

ESPÉRER, ès-pâ-râ, v. a. v. 77, to hope, to hope for, to expect.

[Espérer governs the future when the phrase is affirmative; the subjunctive when it is negative: j'espère que vous le ferez. Espérer, used interrogatively, governs the future or the subj. indifferently: espérez-vous que je le fasse or que je le ferai? Espérait-il que je vinsse or que je viendrais lui demander pardon? J'espère le voir; j'espère de le voir, both may be said, but with this difference, that the preposition always implies doubt or uncertainty. Hence in the phrase: j'espère bien le revoir, the adverb bien excludes all uncertainty, and consequently renders the prep. inadmissible. In the following phrases, on the contrary, the prep. is necessary: peut-on espérer de vous revoir? Je crois pouvoir espérer de le revoir. On m'a fait espérer de le revoir; the two infinitives evidently denoting uncertainty.]

ET, à, conj. and. (The final t of et is never pronounced.) Et, both. — Pierre — Jean, both Peter and John.

N. B. 1°. Dans une énumération on n'emploie cette conjonction qu'une seule fois, et on la place devant le dernier des mots qu'on veut joindre: exemple, mes frères, mes parents et mes amis m'ont abandonné, my brothers, relations and friends have forsaken me. Cependant, pour plus d'énergie, on peut la répéter devant chacun des mots: exemple, Et mes frères, et mes parents, et mes amis m'ont, etc. 2°. Les mots qu'on veut lier par la conjonction et doivent être du même ordre, c'est-à-dire ou tous substantifs, ou tous adjectifs, ou tous adverbes, ou tous verbes; s'ils sont tous verbes, ils doivent être au même temps, ou bien il faut répéter le nominatif devant chaque verbe. 3°. Cette conjonction exige qu'on répète au second membre de la phrase les articles, pronoms, prépositions, etc., qui se trouvent au premier. 4°. Deux pronoms relatifs liés par la conjonction et doivent se rapporter au même antécédent, et non à des noms différents; autrement il y aurait équivoque. 5°. Avec cette conjonction il faut garder le même ordre dans l'arrangement des mots; je vois mes honneurs croître et mon crédit tomber (not et tomber mon crédit). I see my honours increased, and my credit fall. Et de boire et de rire, etc., [se dit à la fin d'un récit pour marquer que l'affaire se termina par boire, par rire, etc.] the affair was terminated by a good dinner, etc.

GENS, zân, s. m. pl. du mot GENT, people, men, folks, hands. [N. B. Gens is masculine when it comes before its adjective, and feminine when the adjective comes first; and although the adjective coming before that noun is feminine, yet if there follows another adjective, or a participle, or a pronoun personal, this last must be masculine. The word tout coming before gens is put in the masculine, when it is attended by no other adjective, or the adjective coming before it is of the common gender, but when the adjective coming before gens is feminine, the word tout agrees with it also.] Des — fins, de fines —, cunning folks. Tous les — de bien, all honest people. Toutes les vieilles —, all old people. Les petites —, the lower sort of people. — sans aveu, vagabonds. — de mer, the mariners. Les — du roi, the king's council. Se connaître en —, to know mankind. Tous nos —, all our people. —, servants, attendants, men, people, domestics.

[Gens: neither the rules nor examples above given thoroughly explain the construction of gens, a few additional instances and observations may not be deemed superfluous. Formés par l'expérience, les vieilles gens sont prudents, schooled by experience, old people are prudent. Vieilles is fem., because it immediately precedes gens, prudents is masc. because it follows gens, formés is also masculine because in its natural order the phrase should run thus: sont prudents, parce qu'ils sont formés par l'expérience. We say bonnes et vieilles gens because bonnes is connected with vieilles by a conjunction, and both adjectives have a feminine termination. We say bons et honnêtes gens, because honnête being an adjective of the common gender prevents bon from taking the feminine termination bonnes. Ces petites gens-là sont tous insupportables, petites precedes gens, and is fem.; tous follows it and is masc. Les questionneurs les plus impitoyables sont les gens vains et désœuvrés, vains et désœuvrés follow gens and are therefore masc. Though gens be essentially feminine, yet the following compound nouns are masculine. Gens de lettre, gens d'affaire, gens de robe, gens de cœur, gens de bien, gens de guerre, as also jeunes gens: de vrais gens de lettre, de bons gens d'affaire, certains jeunes gens. Tous les gens sensés, tous les honnêtes gens, tous is masc. in the first phrase because it is alone, in the second because honnête is an adject. of the common gender. Toutes les bonnes gens, toutes les meilleures gens, toutes is fem. in both cases because bonnes et meilleures are fem. Certaines honnêtes gens, certaines vieilles gens, honnêtes and vieilles account for the gender of certain. Quels braves gens! quels masc. because braves is of the common gender. Quelles sottes gens, quelles fem. because sottes is fem.]

The verbs terminating with a or e in the 2d person sing. of the imperative take no final s: va, go; donne, give; except vas-y, go thither: portes-y, carry-thither; portes-en, carry some; donnes-en, give some, etc.; but it is not so with en, préposition: porte en mon sein, bring in my bosom. The verbs terminating with i may indifferently take a final s or no: béni or bénis, bless; fai or fais, do; voi or vois, see; as likewise, vien or viens, come; tien or tiens, hold; crain or crains, fear; fein or feins, feign; and other verbs ending with ain or ein. The more general use, however, is to write such verbs with a final s (a letter appropriated in French to the 2d person sing.), the omission of it being reserved to the poets, in order to help them in their rhymes. The other verbs always take a final s: prends, take; mets, put; sers, serve; sors, go out; pars, set out; dors, sleep; meurs, die; cours, run; bats, beat, etc., etc. In imperative sentences affirmative the pronouns, objects or terms, always come after the verb which governs them, but are still incorporated with it, and must be joined to it by a hyphen; va-t-en, get you gone; suivez-moi, follow me; prenons-le, let us take it; donnez-nous, give us; dites-lui, tell him laissez-moi faire, let me do; fais-toi friser, get your hair drest. But if the pronouns are governed by another verb in the infinitive, no hyphen should be used, and we say; va t'amuser, go and amuse yourself; venez me parler, come and speak to me; allez vous habiller, go and dress yourself, etc., etc.)

IMPÉRATIF, adj. et s. m. (gram.) imperative.

INFINITÉSIME, s. f. ou adj. (geom.) infinitesimal.

INFINITIF, in-fî-nî-tîf, s. m. (gram.) infinitive, the infinitive mood. (N. B. A French verb, when employed substantively, is always used in its infinitive: Lire est une occupation utile, reading is a useful occupation. In which case the present in French, either simple or compound, performs the same office as the gerund in English, and of course may be construed with any preposition: en, however, must be excepted, because it always requires the gerund. Sometimes the infinitive, used with no preposition or preceded by à, begins a sentence in the same manner as the ablative case absolute of the Latin: À tout prendre, il en arrive à peu près, comme au jeu, upon the whole, it is nearly the same as in play. Faire périr le roi ou le rétablir, il n'y avait pour elle qu'un de ces deux partis à prendre, to put the king to death or to reinstate him, she had only one of these two measures to take. But such infinitives, with no preposition, are chiefly used in exclamation or interrogation: Tirer un homme de sa patrie, et puis l'abandonner dans cette île déserte pendant son sommeil! to take a man out of his native country, and abandon him afterwards in this desert island when he is asleep! Sometimes the infinitive stands for the subject of a sentence, as in the first example; lire, etc., in which case it is mostly answered by c'est, even when preceded by de: Souffrir sûr le trône un usurpateur si monstrueux, c'était déshonorer la nation, to suffer so infamous a usurper to fill the throne, was a disgrace to the nation. V. CE. De vous dire s'il y a plus de fous à lier dans un pays que dans l'autre, c'est ce que mes faibles lumières ne me permettent pas, whether there are more mad people in one country than the other, I cannot tell, my notions on that head are too imperfect. Sometimes, in the comical style, the infinitive preceded by de is employed without being governed at all; in which case it may be resolved by a tense of the indicative corresponding to that of the preceding verb. Grenouilles aussitôt de sauter dans les ondes, c'est-à-dire, les grenouilles sautent, the frogs immediately jump into the water. Il y avait 200 litières, et de rire, c'est-à-dire, on riait, there were 200 litters (at the siege of Orange), which made people laugh heartily. Alors hurlements de cesser, larmes comiques de tarir, c'est-à-dire, cesseront, tariront, then howling will cease, comic tears will dry up.

[Pas and point follow or precede the verb in the infinitive: pour ne point souffrir, pour ne souffrir pas; the former is the more usual. Point is a stronger negative than pas; the first is absolute, the second may be merely restrictive: il n'a pas d'esprit ce qu'il en faudrait pour, etc., he has not the wit necessary to. Il n'a point d'esprit, he has no wit; the sense is complete. For this reason, pas is preferable to point before plus, moins, si, autant, and other comparative terms; as also before nouns of number. Pas implies something transitory, accidental; point expresses something permanent and habitual: il ne lit pas, he is not reading; il ne lit point, he reads nothing, he does not read. Point supplies the place of non: je le croyais mon ami, mais point; with pas, the phrase would be: mais il ne l'est pas. Both are used in questioning, where point implies doubt, but pas certainty or reproach. Both may be suppressed in such questions as the following: y a t-il un homme dont elle ne médise? avez-vous un ami qui ne soit des miens? With prendre garde, in the sense of beware, both are suppressed: prenez garde qu'on ne vous séduise; in the sense of take notice, either may be used: prenez garde que l'auteur ne dit pas ce que vous pensez. Pas and point are omitted when the negative is made sufficiently clear by other restrictive terms. Je ne soupe guère, je ne soupe jamais; je ne dis mot. Should que or dont continue such phrases the omission is still observed: je ne soupe guère, je ne soupe jamais que je ne m'en trouve incommodé. With autre que, they are often omitted: je n'ai d'autre but, d'autre devoir que, etc.; they are constantly omitted when autre is understood: je n'ai de volonté que la tienne. Pas and point are suppressed after que in the sense of pourquoi: que n'êtes-vous arrivé plus tôt; also when que expresses a desire: que ne m'est-il permis!... O that I had it in my power!

NÉ, E, nâ, part. de Naître, v. 57, born. — de la mer, sea-born. Vous semblez — pour la cour, you seem designed by nature for the court.
